Dear Professor Gross:

Your colleague, Professor Korowicz, has given us your name and notice of your being the book-review editor of the American Journal of International Law.

Here, at El Colegio de México, we are about to launch a journal on international affairs, and we would like to have a strong book-review section. It occurs to me that you may order a carbon copy of the reviews you write for your American Journal, send them to us, and we will translate them and publish them in Spanish in our journal. We will pay you, of course, for it.

Will you please consider this possibility and advise me?

Sincerely yours.

Dear Professor Villegas:

Thank you for your letter of January 12. I took up your suggestion with the Editor-in-Chief of the American Journal of International Law and he informs me that it would not be feasible to send you copies of my reviews for publication in your Journal.

I shall, of course, be very glad to review occasionally a book for your Journal.

Sincerely yours,

Leo Gross, Book Review Editor
American Journal of International Law

Dear Professor Gross:

It is a pity that the Editor-in-Chief of the American Journal of International Law think unfeasible that you would send copies of your reviews to be published in our quarterly International Studies because the audience of each journal is entirely different.

Please send us as many reviews as you may able to write for us.

Sincerely yours
