Dear Dr. Villegas:

Thank you very much for letting us see your article "The United States and Cuba: The Latin American Outlook". We are agreed that we would like to publish this but feel that there are one or two passages which require some editing. The passage on page 15 about the hydrangea and the following sentences about the impression the individual American makes abroad seem to us to need a little careful qualification if you are not to be accused of vague generalization. This is the passage we are most concerned about. There are one or two other minor passages which we would like to edit to a very slight extent. Would you be agreeable to our doing this editing and then sending you our edited version for your approval or, of course, rejection? I feel that it would save us both time and agony if we were to deal with the problem in this manner.

I would like to emphasize our real enthusiasm for your work. We are most interested in publishing it and I hope that we may collaborate satisfactorily upon the creation of a final version. Thank you again for letting us see your work. With good wishes,

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Skelton:

Thanks for your letter of April 28.

I have no objection to consider your suggestions in regard to my article sent to you. As soon as I have them, I shall write you back.

Yours sincerely
